End of an era for Lochlin Community Centre

THOMAS SMITH
Journalist

Out with the old and in with the new. That is how the saying goes.

Yet like an old friend we won't see again, it is bittersweet to see the Lochlin Community Centre torn down.

From baseball games, funerals, baby showers, and card nights, a lot of connections formed at Lochlin Community Centre.

Pamela Marsales, organizer for Friends of the Rail Trail (FoRT) has fond memories from the years of events their organization hosted at the Lochlin Community Centre.

"FoRT enjoyed hosting many events over the years in the quaint little Lochlin hall," said Marsales. "It was folksy and warm, with good acoustics."

Her favourite memory of the community centre was their Stone Soup event in celebration of the Haliburton County Rail

Toxic drug supply raises alarm bells in Haliburton

EMILY STONEHOUSE
Editor

A recent slew of local drug overdoses has led to Lakelands Public Health formally issuing a statement sharing information on a toxic drug supply.

"It is important to be aware that the unregulated drug supply may be contaminated with other substances," reads the press release. "Naloxone should be used in all suspected drug overdoses, due to the possibility of opioid contamination or poisoning."

Lakelands noted that there has been a high number of suspected drug poisonings which have required support from paramedic services, with the substance of concern suspected to be opioids. This warning comes on the heels of a recent warning of suspected poisoning from Northumberland County shared on April 16.

"Public Health Units are responsible for opioid overdose surveillance," explained Kate Hall, substance use and harm reduction coordinator for Lakelands Public Health. "However, if paramedics are not called to the scene of a drug poisoning or the person isn't taken to hospital, we have no way of knowing that it occurred. What we see in the data is only telling part of the story of what is happening in our communities."

Hall noted that the health unit began the practice of alerting the public to drug poisonings in 2019, with the last warning issued in August, 2021.

"Drugs, like people, travel from one community to another," explained Hall. "Unfortunately, without drug checking capabilities in our communities, we have no way of knowing what drugs are circulating at any given time. We rely on analysis and reporting by Toronto Drug Checking Service that accepts samples from anywhere in the province for testing, to better understand what is happening in the unregulated supply and inform our communities."

> "Drugs, like people, travel from one community to another."
> — Kate Hall, substance use and harm reduction coordinator for Lakelands Public Health

Hall explained that drug poisoning happens when a person unknowingly consumes a substance that has been adulterated, and is not what they thought or what they usually consume. She said that an overdose from a drug poisoning happens when the quantity, potency and/or mix of substances consumed overwhelms the body, and the organs cannot process it.

"Opioids, like fentanyl for example, are known to depress the respiratory system," she said. "The unregulated street supply of opioids is mixed with multiple substances that each have different effects on our brain and body. Drug poisonings happen due to a contaminated and increasingly toxic and unpredictable unregulated street drug supply."

According to recent research from the University of Victoria, it is estimated that for every one fatal overdose from drug poisoning, there are 15 non-fatal overdoses. "Synthetic drugs target the central nervous system, particularly the brainstem which controls breathing," Hall explained. "There are growing concerns about acquired brain injury as a result of opioid-induced respiratory depression that can happen in a non-fatal overdose situation."

Signs of an opioid overdose may include:

- very small pupils
- slow or no breathing
- cold and clammy skin
- blue or purple fingernails or lips
- snoring or gurgling sounds
- heavy sedation, difficulty being woken up

Anyone who sees a person experiencing drug poisoning is urged to intervene. Call 9-1-1, give the person naloxone, and start rescue breathing and, or chest compressions. The Good Samaritan Act protects anyone trying to help in an emergency from possible legal repercussions. The Good Samaritan Drug Overdose Act also helps protect people on the scene of an overdose from being charged for using or possessing drugs for personal use.

Free naloxone kits are available at all Lakelands Public Health offices, participating local pharmacies, and other local agencies.

Governance structure to be discussed at all levels

EMILY STONEHOUSE
Editor

In an effort to ensure transparency and accountability, the County of Haliburton CAO Gary Dyke has been making his rounds to the lower-tier council tables to discuss the affordability and governance structure study put in place by the upper tier.

During an April 8 meeting of County council, Dyke made the proposal to work alongside Eastern Ontario Regional Network (EORN), an organization created by the Eastern Ontario Wardens' Caucus, to facilitate a report that would delve into the structure of a multi-tiered governance model.

County councillors unanimously agreed to allow Dyke to move forward, with the caveat that it would be the responsibility of the next elected council to move forward with any potential restructuring.

During the April 28 meeting of Dysart council, Dyke once again presented his suggestions to the lower tier. "I applaud the whole approach to get the public involved," said Councillor Pat Casey. "I think it's important to everyone to have transparency as to what money is coming in and what's going out."

Casey went on to share that he has heard frustrations about the multi-tiered governance structure when it comes to planning. "I struggle with it a lot," he said, "that we have to go through a second tier of full planning and full studies and full proof of a lot of different things. And a lot of it is already done in our tier. It often discourages development."

Dyke noted the service delivery review completed in 2022, which outlines inefficiencies within the tiered system, which will be pulled from for the overall study.

Deputy Mayor Walt McKechnie questioned what level the provincial and federal governments will be playing in downloading responsibilities and taxation to the lower tiers. "I feel very worried … about what's going on at a provincial level and at a federal level," he said.

Dyke agreed. "There should be more support from the provincial and federal government on the housing front, there should be more support from the provincial government on the healthcare front and social services piece," he said. "However, I think within the structure that we have, I firmly believe that … the more work we put into understanding and making sure we are functioning at the highest level we can, those opportunities will increase."

Councillor Barry Boice voiced his concern about losing the specific identities of the varying Municipalities should an amalgamation of the county take place. "I worry that we're going to get forgotten about at the lower end," he said.

"That's a very good point to make," said Dyke, "and it's one that's not lost on us … Yes, a boundary may change or whatever that may be, but the elements that make it a community a community … should be able to go forward."

Pizza Pasta Plus opens in Haliburton

THOMAS SMITH
Journalist

Scott Muirhead opened his restaurant Pizza Pasta Plus on April 25. Serving pizza, pasta, sandwiches and more, they are located at 41 Maple Avenue. Stop by for a hot slice. /THOMAS SMITH staff

Scott Muirhead may be new to Haliburton, but he is already making moves to better his community.

For the past 28 years, Muirhead has been behind the wheel of a truck and in his spare time, he volunteers with Station 3 of the Highlands East fire department.

Now with Pizza Pasta Plus, he can give back in the form of delicious food too.

During this past slow season for trucking, Muirhead decided to take the leap and open his first brick and mortar restaurant, Pizza Pasta Plus.

Located at 41 Maple Avenue, don't let the simplicity of Pizza Pasta Plus fool you. Their food is nothing but ordinary.

With early beginnings as a hot dog cart in Gooderham, Muirhead improved his offerings in the form of a food trailer called Belle's Lil' Food Cabin. Serving hamburgers, hot dogs, and wraps, Muirhead was helped by his daughter, pulling it to events and the local gas station.

"I have always enjoyed making food," said Muirhead.

Muirhead says it was the higher population and the influx of cottagers that attracted him to the former site of Haliburton Just Wine and Beer. With only one dedicated pizza restaurant in Haliburton, Muirhead is confident that his love of both pizza and pasta will allow him to be successful in Haliburton.

It was from an online poll that Muirhead decided to lean into the Italian food angle. He is also pleased to offer a fine array of sandwiches and salads.

Muirhead's personal favourite is his Philly Cheesesteak pizza. Using a provolone base and toppings of mozzarella, slow cooked steak, mushrooms, peppers and onions, the pizza imitates an authentic cheesesteak from the city of brotherly love.

"The provolone, steak, and mozzarella is a really good combination," he said.

Initially, Muirhead sought to open the restaurant as a solo venture. With an outpour of support and interest on his opening on Saturday, April 25, he had to call in temporary reinforcements of his wife.

"We were slammed," said Muirhead. "People were lining up out the door."

Soon, Muirhead's 19 year old daughter Paiton will be joining Pizza Pasta Plus.

"I didn't expect to be that busy, especially being this small little shop. People were willing to wait for their order because we were so busy. It felt good."

Muirhead says that the flow of customers has continued in the first week of being opened. After receiving an interest in gluten free options, he now stocks gluten free dough and pasta.

The number one goal of Pizza Pasta Plus is to offer food at affordable prices and foster a welcoming environment for families. On one side of the restaurant, there is even a dedicated kid's corner for playing and colouring while kids wait.

"It's great to see families come in with their kids and enjoying the food," said Muirhead. "There is something about seeing a smile on a little kid's face."

Everything is made fresh to order. For now, new topping combinations will be added to the menu as they are dreamt up.

"I love seeing the start with that dough. Then stretching it out and afterwards, the finished product that comes out of the oven," said Muirhead. "You create something that you cannot find anywhere."

Muirhead's next goal is to train Paiton towards taking over the restaurant, supporting her from the sidelines.

Haliburton Pizza Pasta Plus is open on Thursdays from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Fridays from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. Saturdays from noon to 8 p.m. and Sundays from noon to 6:30 p.m. Local delivery is available. The restaurant is also currently hiring and asking for students to bring their resume into the restaurant to apply.

Identify

WHILE THE County of Haliburton undergoes the process for a governance structure study, CAO Gary Dyke has ventured to each lower tier table to discuss the roll-out of the project.

Earlier this year, County councillors agreed to move ahead with the study. Dyke has urged along the way that we at least need to have the wheels in motion to show the province that we're not just sitting in that cushy place of status quo.

But at this week's Dysart meeting, when Dyke brought the project to councillors, as talk around numbers and responsibilities and logistics simmered down, Ward 5 councillor Barry Boice voiced one worry we've all been thinking about: identity.

"I worry that we're going to get forgotten about at the lower end," he said.

This is one of those softer points that isn't always taken into consideration during the process of reporting and consultancy. The people who make a community tick, the little idiosyncrasies and stories and mannerisms that serve as the personality of a population, a heartbeat of a home.

It's something we have been navigating at our own papers. While we see the value in having one countywide newspaper, the history and heart of the early days is the foundation of who we are today. Both the Haliburton County Echo and the Minden Times offer over 100 years of community representation; a delicate balance of the past and the present.

And while the numbers and responsibility and logistics all point towards amalgamating our offerings, there's a tiny twinge of cutting ties with the past that none of us are quite ready to snip.

There is risk and value in both options for county amalgamation. If we do not become one, ongoing inefficiencies in planning, in taxation, in roadwork, in programming will continue to stack up. In Doug Ford's practice of slashing and burning anything that does not directly serve his government, it's highly likely that the province will force some sort of bundling down the road anyway.

If we get ahead of the wrecking ball, then it's in our court. There's power in venturing ahead of the game.

But if we do begin to fall under one name, one government, one place, what happens to the cracks and corners of our community? The personality of a population, the heartbeat of a home.

When we pigeonhole groups, we dilute the culture that trickles back through time. While we all bleed red, we are also the product of the place that raised us. And we should carry that title with pride.

County staff will have to work diligently to ensure that the pride of place is not swept out the door when numbers and responsibility and logistics are placed on the forefront. Does it make sense to work towards a governance structure that prioritizes moving towards the future? Absolutely. But it needs to be done in a way where our past and our present are taken into consideration.

Because the black and white framework of numbers and responsibility and logistics can only account for so much. The real colour of a community comes from the personality of a population, the heartbeat of a home.

And that's something money can't buy.

Unethical design tested in the courts

IN LATE March, a jury in California ruled that Meta and Google were liable for harming the mental health of a young woman named Kaley. Identified in the lawsuit as KGM (as she was a minor at the time the lawsuit began in 2023), Kaley started using YouTube at the age of six, and Instagram at the age of 11, among other social media platforms, resulting in anxiety, depression, and body dysmorphia.

KGM v Meta et al. is considered a bellwether case among a number of similar cases that are meant to test the law around problematic social media use in California. In all, there are thousands of similar cases in California waiting in the wings, and the outcomes of those cases may be directly related to the success of the KGM case. This could also include lawsuits for online harms brought against Meta, TikTok, and Snapchat by a group of Ontario school boards (which includes our own Trillium Lakelands District School Board).

Humans & Technology

Erin Kernohan-Berning

The lawsuit (which initially also involved TikTok and Snapchat, who settled out of court), didn't focus on the content being posted to the social media platforms that caused KGM harm. This is because under Section 230 of the US Communications Decency Act of 1996, "interactive computer services" cannot be held liable for the content posted by their users. Section 230 is considered a key piece of legislation that enabled the creation of important foundations of internet services including search engines and cloud services. However, it has also been a major stumbling block in holding social media companies accountable for online harms. Instead, KGM's lawyers focused on specific design features of Instagram and YouTube that they argued kept her compulsively using those platforms.

The kinds of features KGM v Meta et al. focused on included infinite scroll, autoplay of video, and algorithmic feed recommendations, calling them defective. These features, among others, have been shown to be designed to capture a user's attention and maximize their time on a platform. If you ever find yourself absentmindedly scrolling Instagram, Facebook, or TikTok where an algorithmic feed is the default, your attention has been captured by this deceptive design. Citing internal documents from both Meta and Google, KGM's lawyers were able to show that these features – which they cited as contributing directly to the mental health struggles Kaley experienced – were deliberately and knowingly implemented by these platforms and used to (despite their own age policies) target and retain young people.

While this case could certainly change how social media companies approach accountability in the design and safety of their platforms, it is only the first step. Meta and Google have both said they will appeal, and there are additional cases that will need to see success before a legal precedent is set that will change how these companies operate. Experts like University of Ottawa's Michael Geist and George Washington University's Jonathan G. Cedarbaum have both raised questions about whether the focus on these platforms as "defective" products will have the legal effect that plaintiffs hope it will. After all, every feature on Instagram is designed to do exactly what it does for a reason. To paraphrase Ruined by Design author Mike Monteiro, these products do what they do because they were designed that way.

Social media companies aren't the only ones facing legal pressure for unethical decisions. The families of the Tumbler Ridge school shooting victims, one of the worst mass shooting incidents in Canadian history, have filed a series of lawsuits against OpenAI. A ChatGPT account that was later linked to the shooter had been flagged for the risk of the user committing real-world violence – despite being warned by their internal safety team, OpenAI leadership opted not to warn police. These lawsuits join several others that are seeking damages from OpenAI, with ChatGPT implicated as a major contributing factor to serious mental health problems – in some cases resulting in the deaths of the people who were using the chatbot for support.

KGM vs Meta et al. has been called social media's "big tobacco moment." No amount of money won in these lawsuits will undo the harm caused by what were decisions made in pursuit of profit above all. No one knows that better than the plaintiffs in those cases. The goal is that with enough lawsuits, and consequently enough financial risk, tech companies like Meta and OpenAI will be forced to change how they prioritize user safety in the design of their platforms.

Fuel me once

IF, GOD forbid, somebody you know has had a complete heart stoppage and no medical assistance is within reach, you might want to quickly drive them to the nearest gas station. I'm not a doctor, but I'm certain that seeing the price of gas would jumpstart anyone's heart.

This confuses me since it was not that long ago that our federal government removed their gas tax. Like others, I thought this would provide relief for more than just a few days.

Sadly, the fuel companies know that they can easily raise prices and blame it on extenuating circumstances.

After all, there is an idiotic and unnecessary blockage in an important, strategic place that is currently choking international oil supply. But enough about the White House.

What matters now is how we get fuel prices down again.

Lucky for everyone, I've devised a plan that is so crazy that it just might work. If it does, it would open the Strait of Hormuz.

Loon Tales

Steve Galea

I know what you are thinking – greater minds than mine are already working on the problem. But, if you believe that, you obviously haven't been watching US government press conferences.

So, hear me out.

In an effort to reduce the price of gas, we've now tried freeing up oil reserves, opening the Strait of Hormuz, and reducing fuel taxes. And all these things have failed.

What we haven't tried yet is doing what everyone else does to make President Trump see their point of view. That's right, we haven't yet offered him a blatant and obvious bribe.

But what do you give a man who has someone else's Nobel Prize, and other awards that were made up just to please him?

Well, no one has given him a commemorative jacket yet, right?

The jacket I am proposing is a one-of-a-kind garment, long-sleeved and with plenty of real gold buckles. It would be white so he could wear it in the ball room that he dreams of. Most importantly, it would commemorate his imminent victory in the Strait of Hormuz. It could, and should be, a gift from the world.

That's right, we should get him a Strait Jacket.

Let's be honest. No one deserves a Strait Jacket more than President Trump. And I bet most people in the world think it would suit him too.

When he puts it on, and all the buckles are fastened tight, we could all just compliment him and tell him how he now looks like he's straight out of central casting. We don't need to mention The One Flew Over the Cuckoos Nest part.

Once he gets this jacket on and is basking in the media attention it gets him, we could take him to meet "Napoleon." I'm certain they would get along famously.

Also, you just know that he would soon be marketing these Strait Jackets to his MAGA base at an excellent rate of $99.99. And they would buy and wear them like they were going out of style too, because – surprise, surprise – they go with the hats.

To conclude, this simple functional jacket could solve the price issue at the pumps and keep him and his base occupied until the next election.

At that point, all we can do is hope that the American public chooses not to get fueled again.

pic of the past

Choosing

IT WAS a miserable day. The overcast sky was threatening more rain any moment and the wind went right through Jim's jacket. He and Mitch were finishing up work, a satisfying pile of logs now cut, split and ready to stack. Best way to stay warm on a day like this was to keep busy and get that outdoor work done.

Or so Mitch liked to say even though Jim had to practically drag him out to the woodshed. It was only the promise of one of Monika's butter tarts that had finally done the trick. She had left a dozen at Jim's place as thanks for fixing her washing machine. He had even put up with her muttering about 'built-in obsolescence' as he worked away.

Our road Down

Sharon Lynch

Now the two men sat with their sugary treats and instant coffee in Jim's cluttered kitchen, talking politics. It was Jim who had raised the topic. Mitch, though not very informed, had plenty of opinions on the subject. His list of what was wrong with the world in general and their own little corner of it, was long. Jim challenged him to stop complaining and do something about it. Mitch looked at him and smirked. "What – run for Prime Minister?"he asked.

Jim pointed out that it was election day but Mitch had yet to say anything about voting. For himself, Jim was planning to do just that once he had satisfied his sweet tooth. But Mitch thought it was a waste of time. "It won't make any difference," he stated, "So why bother?"

Mitch came from a long line of close-knit skeptics who reinforced their own prejudices and beliefs. One of these was that all politicians were self-serving and didn't give a darn about the people they were supposed to serve. Jim, while not exactly naive, took a more positive, proactive approach. "If you don't vote, you have no right to complain," he stated.

Mitch grumbled. So Jim pushed it. He asked if Mitch even knew who was running for office? Well no, he didn't. But it didn't matter because they were all the same.

Now Jim went into a bit of a rant about democracy and how people got the government they deserved. Mitch just sat there, picking bits of pastry from between his teeth and looking skeptical. Then Jim told Mitch he was dropping by the polling station on his way home and wondered if Mitch might want to come along. "I'm having chili for supper and you're welcome to stay for that but only if you vote," he told his friend.

Mitch sighed. He really liked Jim's chili. And he had nothing else planned for the rest of the afternoon. As they rode to the community centre in Jim's truck, they talked about what needed to change in their little neck of the woods.

There was a short line-up at the polling station. Despite the bitter wind, people had shown up. "So who do you think might not be half-bad?" Mitch asked.

MAHC asking too much

To the Editor,

Yours wasn't the only back to go up hearing of a financial ask from MAHC!!!! The very nerve to be taking offense because "we haven't stepped up" I find appalling!! This from a community with two hospitals with fully equipped Emergency Rooms, not to mention the Urgent Care Burk's Falls location asking a community that had one hospital shut down and urgent care on limited hours mostly due to lack of staff because of the health care shortage in this province! Let's not even get started on the number of the population that have no primary care!! Maybe they should take their ask to the guy with the deep pockets for his own agendas and who is one of the ones who will benefit most from these upgrades - Mr.Ford! Oh that's right! That's our money too!

Alto's commitment to rural communities

Agricultural land is essential to Canadians.

The economic, social, and environmental benefits of Alto are real. For many rural and agricultural communities, the concerns about land, operations, and day-to-day realities are just as real.

A train travelling at 320 km/h requires straight tracks. And yet there's no single reality in agriculture. It differs from one region to the next, and from one farm to another. This means the final route will be a trade-off and that there's no perfect solution to building it. Our job is to make sure we do this the right way; that entails limiting impacts, compensating fairly over the long term, and developing the right support for the farming industry as a whole.

Countries like France and Italy with substantial farming communities have shown that high-speed rail and agriculture can coexist. That's what we're working to achieve here. That means doing the work with communities and being upfront about what we can commit to.

Since consultations began in January 2026, farmers and property owners have been clear about what's at stake for them. We have listened, and our commitments are straightforward:

- Limit impacts from the start by first defining a wide corridor under study, engaging early, and then selecting the alignment of about 60 metres wide, with the least impact.
- Prioritize negotiated agreements for land acquisition. We will favour an individually negotiated willing-buyer, willing-seller approach.
- Offer fair long-term compensation that covers fair market value and all impacts over time, including land value, disturbance costs, productivity losses and other long-term effects.
- Ensure adapted road access for agricultural operations when they are directly impacted, by negotiating with owners and stakeholders.
- Support agricultural productivity and development through novel solutions to enhance productivity, help preserve farmland, and empower the next generation of farmers.

These commitments set the direction, but we won't get there on our own. It will require a collective effort alongside agricultural organizations to further define the scope of these pledges.

This is our commitment. Because how we build matters just as much as what we build.

Dos and don’ts of event management

THOMAS SMITH
Journalist

Events are a crucial part of communities to create a source of pride and to engage your residents and visitors.

As our climate changes, there are more factors for event organizers to consider.

To better support tourism operators across the Highlands, the Ontario Highlands Tourism Organization invited Jeff Jackson, Ph.D. to present “Emergency Preparedness Planning for Festivals and Events” over Zoom on Thursday, April 30.

Jackson is a leading expert in risk management and outdoors safety.

For every event you plan, the benefits must outweigh any potential risks. To do this, every event needs a risk management plan. The goal of a risk management plan is to prevent foreseeable events and reduce consequences of unforeseeable events.

For example, a foreseeable behavior is disorderly behaviour when people are drinking alcohol. An unforeseeable event is an unexpected storm.

“The goal is to protect our visitors, employees, volunteers and ourselves,” said Jackson.

The key safety concerns every event organizer should have is weather, missing children, injury of participants, physical safety, and any liabilities. There are also big differences between a spectator event, versus an active event such as a poker run.

“If we are inviting people to our event we have a responsibility, a legal responsibility to do that properly,” said Jackson

One fear that organizers brought up during the session is getting sued. Jackson quelled this fear by saying that people can sue for any reason they want. It is better to put those concerns into whether or not you would win your lawsuit.

As part of the Occupiers Liability Act, event hosts have an obligation to keep people reasonably safe while on the premises. The term reasonably safe implies different levels of safety per event. For example, if participants are running in a marathon, an injury is very possible.

Another difference is if someone participates in an event for free versus paid ticketing.

“That has what we call a lower duty of care, than if someone pays for a ticket,” said Jackson. “As soon as money changes hands, the expectations are up that we are going to take better care of them.”

With paid events, it is important to prove that you have undergone further lengths of safety, or else you may be held liable for negligence.

With all events, you need to clarify whether or not paying customers can get their money back in the event of a cancellation.

“Cancellations are going to become a thing,” said Jackson. “That was one of the reasons that I stopped it.”

Referring to his mountain biking event, Jackson says that the increase in spring storms forced him to cancel the event entirely. The risk of cancellation was not worth the potential earnings.

For all events, make sure to conform to local bylaws, get permits, and proper licenses, and if applicable, the fire marshal needs to conduct an inspection.

The other aspect is to ensure proper Occupational Health and Safety Standards for all employees and volunteers. If your event involves the water or off-roading, Transport Canada needs to know what your activity is and will tell you what permits apply to your event.

“You are actually breaking the law if you don’t get the bylaws in place or necessary permits,” said Jackson.

As of April 30, outdoor events can be bring-your-own-beer event, separate category of event permit

“I am thinking it might be opening a whole other can of worms you might not want to get into,” said Jackson.

Simply put, Jackson says that paying money to allow your event guests to bring their own alcohol does not make financial sense.

“Humans are terrible at predicting what can go wrong,” said Jackson.

All events have vulnerabilities like severe weather, power outages, permits, insurance, volunteers, and venue cancellations.

“If you hit these hazards in your event management plan, you are pretty well set,” said Jackson.

One role Jackson advises event organizers to have is an Event Safety Officer whose sole job is to continuously monitor event activities, emerging risks, and safety. The role would also include liaising with EMS and venue staff.

For every event, be 100 per cent certain who is responsible for cancelling.

Once you have created a plan, you can reuse it year after year.

Jackson recommends having people sign a waiver when guests get into the door of your event. Jackson says that there is clear language that is court tested to protect yourself in the event that someone sues.

“It is expensive to defend yourself and that is a liability,” said Jackson. “That is why you buy insurance, because they will defend you in court.”

No lawsuit will cost you less than $50,000, says Jackson.

A site security plan must be made before anyone arrives as well. This includes a smooth form of communication with your teams, making sure your site is suitable, and identifying emergency exits and gathering points.

With the aging population of Haliburton County, Jackson said that it is possible for anyone to experience an overdose, especially with painkillers.

“The idea of risk tolerance and setting limits is asking us what we are not comfortable with,” said Jackson.

With the increase in forest fires, Jackson says that it is now a moral dilemma of continuing with your event when there is smoke in the air. Currently, there are no legal repercussions for running your event when the air quality is poor.

When temperatures are high, Jackson advises having people be active when the day’s temps are the lowest and to take frequent breaks.

Alcohol is one of the biggest wild cards with event organization. You can never predict how intoxicated people will act.

“It kicks in a whole bunch of problems and obligations,” said Jackson. “It’s not the alcohol, it is the stupid behaviour of drunk people that causes issues.”

Kasey Rogerson, rep for OHTO says that there is a push to have alcohol-free events across the region.

Events are great ways to engage with your community or create your own business. Before starting any event, check with your local municipality’s rules and regulations. With many factors to consider, an event management plan is essential for running a successful event.

Kawartha ATV association kicks off season

THOMAS SMITH

Journalist

With the warmer weather, nothing is better than getting outside and connecting with nature.

It makes it even better when you can feel the wind rush past your face as you drive deep into the forest on an off-road vehicle.

Despite some water on their trails the Kawartha ATV Association is stoked to announce that their trails are opening soon.

Carolyn Richards, president of the Kawartha ATV Association for 13 years was first asked to join their team with her business experience and the opportunity to change how they run things.

Since then, the association volunteer force has grown to 70 members, with around 250 riding members. Last year alone, the association sold around 5,000 day passes.

If you want to ride anywhere besides Crown Land in the City of Kawartha Lakes or Trent Hills, a trail permit is required to be purchased from the ATV association.

With twelve members on their board of directors and a team of trail maintenance personnel and patrol teams, it takes hundreds of hours to keep the off roading trails safe and suitable for riders.

Before opening the trails for the season, the association's trail maintenance crew work diligently to inspect trails and check for debris, washouts, and other unexpected issues. When needed, the organization will hire contractors to fix issues or send part of their volunteer force.

The Kawartha ATV Association is also the only ATV association in Ontario with volunteer bylaw officers appointed by the City of Kawartha Lakes.

With Algonquin West and Haliburton County ATV Clubs as neighbours, Richards says that they have a wonderful working relationship in ensuring accessible and rideable trails throughout Ontario.

Kawartha ATV attends to over 3,000 kilometres of trails and has one of the largest ATVing areas in the province. Their pride is the Victoria Rail Trail which runs from Bethany through Fenelon Falls and Lindsay, and ends in Kinmount. Hikers, mountain bikers, and the public are welcomed to walk along the trails, while being aware that they are used by off-road vehicles.

"They are multi-use trails for a reason," said Richards.

The Victoria Rail Trail system amongst other trails are maintained by organizations like Kawartha ATV, not the local municipality. They are happy to keep the trails open to everyone as long as they are treated with respect by all.

There are also historical sites throughout the trail system, including an antique boiler used at the sawmill in Summerville Forest.

Volunteering for over 15 years, Richards is immensely proud of how the off-roading community supports small businesses throughout their trail system and raises money for charity. Last year, the club donated $84,000 to the hospital in Lindsay and they hope to raise $100,000 during their annual poker run event.

"It gives the opportunity for people to get out more in nature and share it with their kids and families," said Richards.

She also notes that riding off-road vehicles provides accessibility for many members who otherwise could not enter deep into the forest with their wheelchair or other mobile aids. The late Raymond Nesbitt, who was paraplegic, was a proud member of the ATV association and a frequent rider along their trails.

For both autistic adults and children, riding in an off-road vehicle can be a pleasing sensory experience and offer a therapeutic respite deep in the forest.

The organization is greatly appreciative of its volunteers and provides them equipment and vets signalling they are a part of the volunteer force. Volunteers are also treated to a dinner at the end of the year in appreciation.

Permits are now on sale for the 2026 riding season. Permits can be obtained through their website katva.ca. Funds from the permits contribute back to the organization's operation and maintenance costs, and other fees associated with the riding club. Most of all, their support goes back into keeping public trails for everyone accessible.

The Kawartha ATV Association hosted their annual Season Kick Off Ride on May 2. The ride goes through Kawartha Lakes and ends at the Austin Sawmill in Kinmount.

The Kawartha ATV Association is always looking for new volunteers. If you would like to contribute to the sport and love of off-road riding, please visit their website at katva.ca.

Mr. Kinmount leaves his legacy

THOMAS SMITH

Journalist

I only had the opportunity to learn from Guy Scott a handful of times throughout my career as a journalist.

Yet every time I spoke with him, I learned something new.

When I had a question about local history, Guy was the first person I'd contact.

At his core, Scott was a lover of local history and sharing it with others.

After graduating from Carleton University with a B.A. in History, then a B. Ed. from the University of Ottawa, Scott realized that his greatest calling was the void of preserving local history.

The bug for publishing local history was caught after publishing "Memories of Somerville Township", followed by his first full book The History of Kinmount: A Community on the Fringe.

Fittingly, this book teaches us that "for order's sake, there has to be a beginning and an end."

I first learned of Guy Scott through research using the Maryboro Lodge Museum.

Glenn Walker, longtime member of the Maryboro Lodge Museum says that Scott first began contributing to the museum's website during the COVID-19 pandemic.

"Guy contributed very extensively to our website," said Glenn Walker, member of the Maryboro Lodge Museum, "It wouldn't be the same without him."

Typical of Scott, Walker had met him when he gave a tour of an abandoned mine in Irondale. "It soon became apparent what a special person he was," writes Walker, in a memoriam published to his website. "He had an understanding of the Kinmount region, past and present, that I doubt anyone will ever match."

Walker recalls Scott as someone that could be known wherever he went, a local legend.

Beyond a prolific writer of local history, Scott was a valued teacher to kids at Fenelon Falls High School. With the announcement of his passing, dozens of comments throughout Facebook share how he sparked a kid's imagination and love for learning about their own roots.

There are few community groups that Scott did not have a hand in shaping or leading at some point.

Scott's final hurrah in the field of history is his contributions to the preservation of history of the Ottawa-Huron Tract. This expanse of land stretches from Algonquin Park to Hastings County. Scott was the founding director of the Ottawa Huron Tract Historical Association. The project continues to capture the history of the colonization of the area sharing tales of roads, rails, and those that inhabited it. The project and its information can be accessed through heritagestories.ca.

As the Editor for the Kinmount Gazette, Scott was crucial in getting the paper off the ground for Kinmount's 150th anniversary celebration. Remaining an editor for the rest of his life, the Gazette provides a valued voice for what is happening in the village of Kinmount and shares local history on a weekly basis, just as Scott intended.

Perhaps Scott's greatest pride in life was the Kinmount Fair.

Like many kids who grew up visiting the Kinmount Fair, it was Scott's voice that announced the parade and dog shows.

Not just its voice, Scott served on the executive board of the Kinmount Fair for decades, like many family members before him.

Tracey Dettman knew Scott her entire life. As a close family friend, her father grew up with Guy.

Later in life, Dettman volunteered with the Kinmount Fair, as Scott grew in rank.

Serving as secretary, treasurer, then president, Scott benefitted from the help of Dettman and the rest of the board of directors to keep the tradition of Kinmount Fair alive.

At one time, Scott was even the president of the Ontario Association of Agricultural Societies.

"Scott was actively involved with the fair up to his passing," said Dettman. "I was really pleased he could be the president at the 150th anniversary celebration."

Scott made the Kinmount Fair what is known as today. He embodied the fair entirely and published several books on the topic. Cited several times by history students, Scott has supported research of rural pageantry more than anyone I know.

The 150th anniversary celebration of the Kinmount Fair was special, with an extra night of celebrating, cupcakes, special heritage events, and welcoming past ambassadors.

As Scott wrote, fairs in Ontario represent not only agriculture, but the rural lifestyle. The Kinmount Fair meant everything to Scott, and as its voice, his passing leaves some identity with it.

"We are going to say goodbye to him at the fairgrounds," said Dettman.

Like his father before him, Scott will have a celebration of life at the Kinmount Fairgrounds Arena.

His celebration will be taking place on May 9 with visitation at 12 p.m. and a ceremony at 1:30 p.m. His family asks visitors to bring their favourite memory of Guy with a memorial box present to collect the stories.

Trail. The event included a storytelling performance by Fay Wilkinson and Jim Blake.

"It was a magical event," said Marsales.

Another event hosted at the community centre was Slow Travel, Local Flavours. At this event, four speakers presented slides on epic adventures like walking the Camino, and biking the Otago Central Rail Trail in New Zealand.

"Our events held in the Lochlin hall always had a special feeling that we didn't get in other venues. I think "relaxed intimacy" describes the feeling it gave to attendees," said Marsales. "To a small non-profit organization, it served as an idea generator because of this quality."

Marsales also says that the large hall of the Haliburton School of Art + Design does not have good acoustics, is too echoey, and there is a persistent rumbling HVAC system.

"The real wood floor made for good sound and therefore, easy camaraderie," she said.

Bob Sisson, councillor for Ward 3 says that the community centre fell into disrepair when the building was neglected during the COVID-19 pandemic. Both mould and asbestos were cited as key reasons for its demolition.

"These people need to have a gathering palace for the community," said Sisson.

Sisson says that some of his favourite memories of the Lochlin Community Centre are the weekend baseball tournaments with the food stand. It was a unique event that brought the community of Lochlin together.

As with the rest of Minden Hills, growth and change is expected.

Sisson says that the new design of the prefabricated building is both modern and fresh.

"I feel the future looks bright for the people of Lochlin with this new addition for the community. It will be used by both local and non-local taxpayers," said Sisson. "I feel the small communities need to have recognition as a landmark in the township and to not be forgotten."

The Lochlin Community Centre has been demolished and will be replaced by a prefabcricated building. /THOMAS SMITH staff

Community shows up for Barker family

EMILY STONEHOUSE
Editor

Carnarvon locals Curtis and Megan Barker have received an outpour of support towards a Go Fund Me page to assist with Curtis' stage four cholangiocarcinoma treatment.

Curtis is currently receiving Enhertu, a specialized medication to treat bile duct cancer. /submitted

A local family is looking to thank the community for giving them a second chance at life.

Carnarvon locals Megan and Curtis Barker have had their fair share of highs and lows, since Curtis was diagnosed with stage four cholangiocarcinoma, or bile duct cancer just over one year ago. The couple have two young daughters, both under the age of four, and have spent time, money, and a significant amount of energy navigating the best treatment plan for the involved dad.

"There's unexpected costs to someone navigating stage four cancer," shared Megan, noting the hospital stays, childcare, and additional medications.

While Megan's private insurance covered the first portion of treatment, the next steps were less certain. The disease has since spread to his liver, lymph nodes, and spine, with Curtis enduring first-line chemotherapy and immunotherapy, followed by second-line chemotherapy, and radiation. Along the way, he has faced multiple hospitalizations, including pneumonia, a blood infection, influenza A, and colitis.

Through testing at Princess Margaret Hospital, it was noted that Curtis's tumor is HER2 3+ positive, which opens the door to a promising targeted treatment called Enhertu. "The goal is to stabilize me or shrink the tumours a bit," he said, noting that it could drastically improve his overall quality of life.

Unfortunately, Enhertu is not funded in Ontario, and is not covered by private insurance.

But this was where the community came in. "We didn't want to bankrupt our family," said Megan, "but we also knew we needed to try everything we could."

The treatments hover around $10,000 per session, which is required every three weeks. The more treatments Curtis receives, the higher the likelihood of success.

With the help of friends Michelle Doiron and Jennifer Hicks, the family launched a Go Fund Me Page, with a goal of $100,000 to try to attain 10 sessions.

And while Megan and Curtis kept their expectations low, the goal was surpassed by community support within 72 hours.

Word of the fundraiser spread quickly through social media, with likes, shares, and comments. The funds continued to trickle in, ranging from all amounts, including $5,000 from NHL player and Haliburton local Matt Duchene. But it wasn't just the financial contributions that made the family feel supported, it was also the sharing on social media, and the words of encouragement offered.

"We're just really grateful that the community stepped up so much," said Megan, "either by contributing or sharing, we're just so thankful."

Out of the hundreds who donated, Megan and Curtis noted that the vast majority were locals. Friends, family, customers from their family business, or former teachers; a testament to how much they have given back to the community over the years.

"Curtis has spent his life showing up for others. Now, we're asking for your help to show up for him," reads the Go Fund Me page. "Please consider donating, and if you're able, sharing this page - it truly means the world to Curtis, Megan, and their girls."

As the Barker family navigate their way forward, they are continuing to keep the Go Fund Me active, to account for hidden costs in treatment, as well as an opportunity to provide ongoing updates. On April 20, Megan took to the page to share the first update: "Curtis is receiving his first treatment of Enhertu right now," she said. "So far, so good. He wouldn't be here without you all. We are so blessed to have such a generous and kind community, standing by Curtis's side."

International Magnificent Bugs in Rugs exhibit lands in Haliburton

IVY KATZ
Journalist

Yvonne Iten-Scott is a local fibre artist and curator of The Magnificent Bugs in Rugs exhibit at Fleming College. Drop into the great hall before the end of May to see it. /IVY KATZ staff

These Magnificent Bugs in Rugs come from all over great Canadian nation, the USA, the UK, Australia, Japan, and Norway, have landed here in Haliburton. Fleming College alumni, fibre artist, and curator Yvonne Iten-Scott, has packed these incredible rugs, into suitcases—at 18 x 24 inches, the rugs are a perfect fit for travelling the world. She has taken them throughout Canada and the USA over the last two years on a three year travelling exhibit. Currently in its second year, Iten-Scott is heading to Utah next, and has her sights set on Japan, Australia, and England, with a possible extension of the tour.

The initiative begun during the late stages of the pandemic about three years ago, Iten-Scott and partner Leslie Knight decided they wanted to educate and inspire children in the ancient craft of rug-hooking. Iten-Scott says it's hard to say how long each rug takes, but a couple months and a few hundred hours is probably the minimum. Each fibre is literally pulled through by hand. There are two techniques: rug-hooking pulls the fibre through from back to front using something like a crochet hook on burlap sack, while punch-needle method punches it through from the front to the back. All manner of materials can be used and the finished products are beyond stunning, with 3D effects possible for those so inclined. The energy the rugs vibrate fills the room—it must be the care and devotion each artist has put into their rugs. It truly is something to behold.

Today, rug-hooking is labelled as a fine art in North America but its roots were not always as posh. The history of rug-hooking goes back to the early 1800s, when machine made carpets made for the rich brought floor coverings into vogue. Yorkshire, England has some of the earliest examples of hooked rugs. Workers in weaving mills were allowed to collect pieces of yarn, known as thrums, up to nine inches in length, which were useless to the mill. The workers would put those thrums through a backing at home and made their own floor coverings. Rug-hooking as we know it today, is likely to have developed in North America and along the eastern Seaboard, from the United States to the Canadian Maritimes to Labrador ad Newfoundland. As immigrants came over on ships, it is likely items such as rags from clothing beyond repair and other scraps were repurposed to create homemade rugs on board.

Rug-hooking is an early example of people repurposing materials into a new, necessary, and aesthetic purpose.

Iten-Scott is helping to ensure this art does not get lost in these modern times, which was the main driver of framing the Magnificent Bugs exhibit for children. Iten-Scott and Knight reached out to 45 artists in their network around the world to bring this brainchild to life. Every artist asked issued an immediate yes, says Iten-Scott, and the artist's had 18 months to make the rugs, with size being the only stipulation.

The exhibit's name is inspired by children's folklore and the idiom: snug as a bug in a rug. Each one of the rugs comes with a fun-fact about the particular insect depicted. Regardless, this exhibit is a sight to see and sure to delight everyone, at any age.

Norway cover artist Håkon Grøn Hensvold's rug—the only rug at a slightly larger size—is a beautiful rendition of a night time garden scene.

In addition to the exhibit, Iten-Scott and fellow visionary Leslie Knight published a book version titled Find the Magnificent Bugs in Rugs. The book includes a poem and fun fact for each bug and can be purchased at the Fleming College gift-shop, with all proceeds going towards free workshops for children.

The book is dedicated to American artist Susan Ferraro, described as a "dynamo," and one of the first artists Iten-Scott and Knight reached out to. Ferraro was insistent on portraying a moth--their most requested insect. Ferraro completed a luna moth and shortly after finishing her rug, Ferraro had passed away suddenly and unexpectedly, says Iten-Scott. Ferraro's husband loaned out the rug for the exhibit. When Iten-Scott was doing research after the terrible news, she read that according to folklore, the luna moth symbolizes the rebirth and the afterlife.

The Exhibit runs daily until the end of May. Just pop into Fleming College to see it.

Introduce your children to this fabulous art. On Sunday May 24th 2026 there will be a FREE drop-in workshop for children, 1-4pm in the Great Hall at Fleming. Children under 12 must be accompanied by an adult. Sign up with Yvonne via email: itenscott@aim.com

For those interested in learning this versatile art, join Yvonne Iten-Scott for a five-day Rug-Hooking and Punch Needle workshop May 25 - 29th offered at Fleming College. Visit the Fleming College website for more info.

Pride in the Highlands starts their season

"I'm going to the cottage."

These are the now iconic words spoken in the tv series "Heated Rivalry" and probably raised some awareness of the 2SLGBTQIA+ community that lives or visits many small rural communities in Ontario.

Here in Haliburton, a strong, diverse, and vibrant group of volunteers with supportive friends and allies originally formed Minden Pride about 10 years ago. Now known as Pride in the Highlands, this group as a not-for-profit organization has evolved into building partnerships with our diverse, growing community and is excited about this year's lineup of events.

A "Kick-off to Summer and fundraising event" will take place with a special showing of the highly anticipated movie The Devil Wears Prada 2 (starring Meryl Streep and Anne Hathaway) at the Highlands Cinema (in Kinmount) on Wednesday, May 20, at 2:30 p.m. and 6:30 pm. Tickets are $22.60, available only online at prideinthehighlands.ca and are expecting to sell out fast. In order to support our local movie theatre, a cash bar is available for confectionery food items. And the displays of movie memorabilia are worth a visit!

So, what's on for this summer? Pride in the Highlands has a number of additional events scheduled throughout May until September. These include a bowling day, an English High Tea, Trivia night, and Pride week (Aug. 17-24), just to name a few. The ever-popular float down the river parade on Sunday, Aug. 24 is attended by many families and friends of all ages! Details about sponsorships, volunteering, and events can be found on their website.

Volunteer David Thairs is this year's Sponsorship Coordinator and Business Community Liaison. "Our Pride events take a lot of planning and resources and we are graciously looking for support with volunteers, donations, providing services or products. It takes a village to make it happen."

Pride in the Highlands welcomes everyone. "We want to build good relationships in the community and show that our events support the diversity, equity and inclusion for people from any race, religion, sexual orientation, and socio-economic backgrounds. This year's theme of "Express Yourself" amplifies that message."

We know that Pride in the Highlands continues to drive meaningful impact with substantial economic benefits for our local businesses during the summer and beyond. In fact, it is the largest cultural event in the Haliburton Highlands with over 2000 participants. For more information, visit their website at PrideintheHighlands.ca.

Telling our Stories

The Telling Our Stories Speakers Series is pleased to welcome Mandy Shintani and Susan Yatabe to the Highlands on Wednesday, May 13, to present The Samurai in Our Closet, their fascinating, untold stories of their Japanese Canadian family's experiences before and during World War II. This little-known chapter of Canadian history is a reminder of what happens when fear and politics override civil rights. It's a story of resilience, recovery, and why those lessons still matter today.

Mandy Shintani lives in Vancouver, BC. She is the chairperson of the Japanese Canadian War Memorial Committee. Susan Yatabe has been the researcher for the Nikkei National Museum & Cultural Centre's Warrior Spirit website and the podcast.

The Speakers Series, a member of the Haliburton County Community Cooperative, takes place on the second Wednesday of each month from 7 to 9 p.m. pm. Note: Ticket sales for this presentation have exceeded our regular capacity at the Fish Hatchery, so we are moving to the Royal Canadian Legion Branch 129 in Haliburton.

Admission is $15/person. Pre-registration is highly recommended. To obtain tickets, contact Barrie Martin at 705-457-7557 or by email at barrieinthehighlands@gmail.com

Maintaining Body and mind while aging

At the Community Coffee House taking place on Monday, May 11 from 7 to 9 p.m. in the Remembrance Hall at the Haliburton Legion, Dr. Norm Bottum will present some new and evolving information about physical and cognitive well-being. Following on his discussion at the March 2025 Community Coffee House on Metabolic Flexibility, Dr. Bottum will help us learn how we can "square the health curve" to maintain good health and independence as we grow older. Well-known to the Haliburton community as a family practitioner with the Haliburton Family Medicine Centre since 1987, Dr. Bottum now limits his practice to family, in-patient and long-term care and sports medicine, retaining a particular passion and interest in aging in an independent and healthy manner.

Northern Wildflowers, the local duo of Sue Shikaze and Myrna McBrien, will begin the evening with half an hour of live music, blending their voices and creating harmonies as sweet and fresh as the wildflowers they are named after. They will perform a selection of their own songs, as well as covers of songs by other women songwriters.

The Community Coffee House gatherings are open to all, at no admission fee, and no reservations required, with light refreshments available. They are hosted by the Baha'i community of Haliburton County, offering live music and presentations to inform and inspire, and providing a space for discussions about how we can make our communities better places.

Movies for the birds

On Thursday, May 14, Those Other Movies will be showing H is for Hawk with showings at 4:15 and 7:15 p.m. at the Northern Lights Performing Arts Pavilion. The film follows Helen (Claire Foy), who, after the sudden death of her father (Brendan Gleeson), loses herself in the memories of their time birding and exploring the natural world together.

To navigate her profound loss, Helen turns to the ancient art of falconry, training a wild goshawk she named Mabel. As she teaches Mabel to hunt and fly free, Helen discovers how deeply she has neglected her own emotions and life. What begins as an act of endurance transforms into an intimate journey of resilience and healing.

This film portrays grief with honesty and includes some jaw-dropping footage of some magnificent birds. It is based on the book by Helen Macdonald. With an exciting local connection, we are excited to welcome Amy from Royal Canadian Falconry in West Guilford (royalcanadianfalconry.com) who will be at the movies together with a hawk to share some information and answer questions. Tickets are just $10 cash at the door or purchase online from www.thoseothermovies.com.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:
Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

School projects may face further delay

by PETER DOWNS
Staff Reporter

A new kink has been added to the Haliburton County Board of Education's construction plans, perhaps delaying its school building projects even further.

The board has found out it will have to go through an additional step to seek approval to upgrade the high school and build a new elementary school.

Because the two projects are far more expensive than the allocation levels originally approved by the province, the board knew it would have to get the green light to build from the provincial Education Improvement Commission (EIC).

But administrators have now learned the plans first need to be approved by the local committee that has been set up to oversee the amalgamation of the boards in Haliburton, Muskoka and Victoria Counties.

The new twist could end up turning the clock back on the board's already slowed construction timetable.

Under guidelines set by the EIC, all trustees on the local transition committee have to reach agreement on Haliburton's building plans before they can be approved.

The committee, chaired by Haliburton chairwoman Cheryl Murdoch, includes three trustees from each board, plus their directors. One native trustee from the Muskoka board may also be added to the committee. (The board directors don't hold the power vote).

Umbrellas and foul-weather gear were standard operating equipment for Saturday's unique log auction in Stanhope. Many braved the steady downpour in search of unusual logs and great bargains. On the hustings:

The candidates are off and running in bid to sway local voters in federal election

by MARIA CALABRESE
Staff Reporter

Black flies aren't the only things that will be descending on us this spring now that campaigning for the June 2 federal election is under way.

While other parties are promising tax cuts to cash strapped Canadians, Liberal incumbent John O'Reilly is reminding voters that the country will not be borrowing any new money by the end of next year, and that only when the elimination of the deficit is imminent will the government be able to increase social programs and cut taxes.

These are the issues at the forefront of the Liberal election campaign:

On Bill C-68: A poll in the Victoria-Haliburton riding showed 49.6 % in favour of gun control and 49.4 % against. While O'Reilly said he takes responsibility for not voting on a bill that he knew the riding was going to lose anyway, he says this is not a single-issue election and that he should be judged on overall performance.

On jobs: The Liberals brought 238 infrastructure grants into the Victoria-Haliburton riding.

On amalgamation in Haliburton County: There are currently 10 municipal offices that serve 14,000 people and the county needs to streamline the way it administers services. "If they don't do it the provincial government is going to do it for them," O'Reilly said.

Reducing government spending will free up money that can be used to maintain roads and other services which are integral to maintaining the area's strong tourism base.

On services: Communication systems must be improved to make it easier to get a designated line for fax machines and computers and encourage small business and home offices in the area. O'Reilly will continue his campaign to embarrass big business by pointing out to big-city customers that they can't use the services they've paid for in rural areas.

Country-wide closures of hospitals, and the province-wide spending cuts to schools as well as the amalgamation of school boards have put education and health care at the forefront of Canadian concerns. And these issues make up the foundation of the Progressive Conservative platform during this election.

PC candidate Lorne Chester says his party would establish the Canadian Educational Excellence Fund which would provide matching funds for provinces and territories, as well as set the standards to form a common curricula to be followed by all schools.

A National Testing Institute, in co-operation with the provinces and territories, would test Grades 3, 8 and 12 students across the country to monitor the progress of school programs.

Chester said the country could free up money for not only these education initiatives, but for health services by increasing transfer payments to the provinces and reducing govern-
